Public Comment:

Darlene Anderson stated that the LCAP and LCFF came about because there were so many African-American students and kids in poverty that were failing. However she has not yet seen it work in the District in the target areas.

Renee Webster-Hawkins, a parent from Alice Birney Waldorf-Inspired K-8 School and Matsuyama Elementary School, is concerned that none of documents that make up the LCAP, Strategic Plan, Special Education Local Plan, and the District budget provide a vision, goal, framework, or funding to meaningfully address the failure of public schools to provide early screening and intervention for dyslexia.

Carl Pinkston, with the Black Parallel School Board, commended the District for an on-going process in learning in the LCAP development and acknowledged the dedication of District staff in managing this year's LCAP process. They appreciate the increase of $500,000 for implementing Restorative Justice Practice. However they recommend that the Board also consider hiring six on-site Restorative Justice workers, targeting schools with high suspension rates. They also note that the reduction in suspension rate on page 51 is disaggregated by type of suspension or ethnicity in Kindergarten and Third grade. They also made the following recommendations: revising the Parent Advisory Council governance in its decision making structure to include staggering two year terms, Board approval of members by the end of July, and having a structure for officers. He also stated that section 3 needs to include measurable goals that are disaggregated by subgroups. Lastly they recommend that input to the LCAP process should flow from the bottom up. He suggests some form of participatory budgeting be adopted as presented by The MET High School students.

Bina Lefkowitz, representing Area Congregations Together (ACT), B'Nai Israel, St. Anthony's Church, Parkside Church, and the English Language Learner Committee, would like more social workers, student support centers, professional development around Social Emotional Learning, Restorative Justice, and cultural competency. They are glad to see common planning time has been worked out. They would like more budget transparency, more bi-lingual counselors, translators, and support for the parcel tax. They ask for a commitment to more transparency by providing things earlier so they can be reviewed.

Liz Guillen, with Public Advocates, commended the District on LCAP work done so far. She referred to a letter sent to the Board that afternoon in response to the LCAP draft that she received. She acknowledged that she is mistaken regarding her claim in item one that the the District is not meeting its minimum obligation for high-need students. She will speak with Gerardo Castillo about this some more. She spoke about recommendations included in her letter regarding transparency.

Rashad Baadqir, a parent and member of ACT, spoke about students of color and the relationship they have with their teachers. He would like to see more students of color identified for Advanced Placement (AP) courses. He feels professional development and parent outreach are critical aspects of this.

Board Member Comments:

Vice President Hansen agrees with the suggestion of having staggered terms and protocol for officers regarding Parent Advisory Council. He also feels the LCAP process should be started ede Interim Chief Academic Officer Iris Taylor and Special Education Director Becky Bryant presented the Special Education Services Annual Service and Budget Plan for 2016-17 as required by State law. They gave an overview of the program which included goals and strategies, and was followed by presentation of the 2016-17 Annual Service and Budget Plan. Lastly they covered next steps and requested a public hearing.

Public Comment:

Angela Sutherland, with the Community Advisory Committee (CAC), introduced Benita Ayala and Rene Webster-Hawkins, also members of CAC. She said they are disappointed that the inclusive practices model has not been expanded. She has concerns with the cost of transporting students to special day classes (SDC). They appreciate that childcare and translators are now being provided. Benita Ayala discussed position concerns that the CAC have. They feel more Program Specialists are needed.

Rene Webster-Hawkins addressed equity issues in the budget and spoke about how special education students deserve equitable access to education. She also has concerns with a lack of Program Specialists. She spoke about the loss of District Advisory Council (DAC). The CAC is thankful for data and metrics that Ms. Bryant is providing.

Darlene Anderson said her major concern is certification of how the governing Board participates and understands the process of the Special Education Local Plan Area (SELPA). She discussed the SELPA. She said she can hold some workshops this summer for parents with special needs children at 24th and funds cannot be used to pay for staff, therefore for 2016
